Now the White House have confirmed that the Department of Labor (DoL) is investigating just how much the former President has been able to shield from tax by former President Clinton, a man who already has more than a quarter of a million dollars of Clinton Cash cheques in his bank accounts. According to Jonathan Turley of the Hill, who has been writing about the Clinton scandals for a decade, the DoL's investigation is likely to be a criminal investigation, not an audit, and could result in a jail sentence for former President Clinton. The reason for this is because the Clinton Cash scandal, in which Clinton is alleged to have engaged in quid-pro-quo with foreign leaders in exchange for donations to the Clinton Foundation in order to change policies in the State Department in favour of donors, is "potentially the biggest issue on the face of the planet". He continues: "Bill Clinton, in the words of the Duke of Westminster's cottager, is an 'old boy' in the political world. For nearly 40 years, he has been 'an old boy' — surrounded by an almost impregnable secret in Washington." Bill Clinton's lucrative relationship with the State Department appears to have also included lobbying. Documents released by the DoL revealed that Bill Clinton and his wife Hillary were lobbying the DoL against an increase of milk prices in September 2014, at the same time that he was providing a $500,000 speaking fee to another food industry industry giant, Tyson Foods. Tyson Foods' vice president of regulatory affairs, for example, revealed that Bill Clinton held a meeting with them at his home in 2012 where the former President told them that their profits would suffer if the US passed a policy that would require them to pay dairy farmers more than the amount they were paying them.
